Tools and Practices to Decrease CVD and Complications in the Diabetic Population of Mexico

The research focuses on the prevention of cardiovascular disease (CVD) and its complications among adults with diabetes in Northern Mexico. Will conduct a cluster-randomized trial among adult patients with diabetes sampled from 20 Secretaría de Salud (Secretary of Health)-operated health centers in Sonora. Ten health centers will be randomized to the intervention. Existing community health workers at the ten health centers randomized to the intervention condition will be trained in the adapted CVD prevention curriculum. To evaluate the intervention, psychosocial (e.g., knowledge, attitudes, and beliefs) and behavioral (e.g., smoking, healthy eating) risk factors for cardiovascular disease will be assessed at baseline, 3 months post and 12-month follow up Clinical risk factors (i.e., BMI, blood pressure, lipids, blood sugar) will be abstracted from existing patient records at the health centers for these same times. Changes in the intervention clinic will be compared to changes over the same time among adult patients with diabetes in each of ten health centers randomized to the control condition (i.e., the usual standard of care).
