Under my leadership the University of Arizona College of Law has been recognized as a leading innovator in legal education and the legal profession. This leadership is reflected in my Winter 2017 National Jurist ranking as the 8th most influential person in legal education – though, needless to say, institutional innovation is very much a team sport. Major innovations include the addition of the GRE as an option for JD admissions (an innovation now followed by Harvard, Georgetown, Northwestern and others), the creation of the first BA in Law in the US (with more than 1100 students after the first 4 years), the globalization of the JD program (with 20% of JD students coming from outside the US), originating the idea of the Arizona “February Bar” option, the reduction in nominal and actual JD tuition to respond to market demand and embrace our public roots (UA COL ranks 7th in value), expansion of clinical and experiential learning opportunities (UA COL now ranks 6th in the US in experiential learning), professionalization of the Arizona Law legal writing program (now US News top 25), the creation of unique global dual degree partnerships, the development of new programs in lawn and technology, intellectual property, business law, advocacy, legal writing, civil justice, mining and natural resources, regulatory science and other areas, including innovative partnerships throughout UofA Colleges and Departments.

PUBLICATIONS

My more than full time job for the past five years has been in academic administration. For most of my academic career I have been a law school teacher and legal scholar, though for many years I also carried administrative responsibilities at both Arizona and Emory (my prior professional home). I began publishing professional articles as a law student at Chicago, and since that time I have written more than 70 articles and essays on a wide range of environmental, criminal justice and legal theory topics. I am a co-editor on several widely used casebooks on criminal procedure and sentencing, and co-founded the Federal Sentencing Reporter, the leading journal on sentencing law and policy and a joint project of the Vera Institute of Justice and the University of California Press. For many years I have been ranked in the top 20 most cited criminal procedure scholars in the United States. I currently serves as a series editor for Summits — books published by the University of Chicago Press and focused on the intersection of environmental science, law and policy.

Founding Editor, FEDERAL SENTENCING REPORTER (Univ. of Calif. Press) (1988-1995);
Senior Advisor / Editor Emeritus (1996 – present)

FSR is the leading journal on sentencing law and reform. In 1988 I founded FSR with Professor Daniel Freed of Yale Law School to track the development of guideline sentencing, provide a forum for exploring sentencing theory and practice, and encourage the evolution of principled sentencing law. FSR is published by the University of California Press and has been sponsored since its founding by the Vera Institute of Justice (NYC).
FSR received startup funding from the Edna McConnell Clark Foundation and soon thereafter a one year line item budget authorization from Congress to provide copies to all federal judges. FSR appears on Lexis and Westlaw, and is available through Heinonline and the UC Press “Caliber” system.

Lead Series Editor, SUMMITS—a book series on Environmental Science, Law & Policy and a joint project of
The UA Institute of the Environment (IE), the James E. Rogers College of Law, the Biosphere 2 Institute,
The Udall Center for Studies in Public Policy, and published by the University of Chicago Press (2007-present)
(originally the Edge series, published by the University of Arizona Press)
